Oklahoma Production Cost Report (Bi-Weekly)

8-8-25

Compared to last report: Most fertilizer remain steady to slightly higher this report. Phosphate demand, combined with limited supply, has industry experts projecting prices to rise this fall and into 2026. While North American demand for phosphorus-based fertilizers is expected to ease this fall, usage in India and Brazil has reached record highs. Potash demand is also climbing, driven by its relatively low fertilizer price. Prices have remained mostly steady, as Canadian potash remains exempt from US tariffs under the North American Trade Agreement. Meanwhile, nitrogen-based fertilizers entering the US by October 5th will not be subject to new tariffs, meaning nitrogen used for fall applications will be unaffected. Farm diesel prices are slightly higher, while hot temperatures in Oklahoma have reduced propane demand, pushing prices down.
